

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

E
340
W73
&65

A 402110

IN MEMORY

OF

ROBERT C. WINTHROP

BY

DANIEL GOODWIN

DELIVERED BEFORE THE CHICAGO LITERARY CLUB, NOVEMBER 26,
1888, AND THE CHICAGO HISTORICAL SOCIETY
NOVEMBER 30, 1894

CHICAGO
PRIVATELY PRINTED

1894

ARTES LIBRARY VERITAS OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

BEQUEST OF
IRVING KANE POND
C.E. 1879, A.M. (HON.) 1911

102

ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

IN MEMORY

OF

ROBERT C. WINTHROP

BY

DANIEL GOODWIN

BEFORE THE CHICAGO LITERARY CLUB, NOVEMBER 26, 1888
AND THE CHICAGO HISTORICAL SOCIETY
NOVEMBER 20, 1894

CHICAGO
PRIVATELY PRINTED
1894

The Lakeside Press
R. R. DONNELLEY & SONS CO., CHICAGO

I. K. Pond
Bequest
3-20-40

CONTENTS.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|----|
| INTRODUCTION, - | - | - | - | - | 7 |
| ESSAY ON "OUR SUPREME EULOGIST BEFORE THE CHICAGO LITERARY CLUB, NOV. 26, 1888, | - | - | - | - | 9 |
| GENEALOGICAL TREE, - | - | - | - | - | 48 |
| MEMORIAL TRIBUTE AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CHICAGO HISTORICAL SOCIETY, NOV. 10, 1894, | - | - | - | - | 49 |
| LIST OF WINTHROP'S EULOGIES, | - | - | - | - | 51 |
| WINTHROP'S ESTIMATE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN, | - | - | - | - | 54 |
| IN RE THE DEARBURNS, | - | - | - | - | 55 |
| IN RE EDWIN C. LARNED, | - | - | - | - | 57 |
| LETTERS, | - | - | - | - | 59 |
| WINTHROP'S ADDRESS ON THE FLAG OF OUR UNION, | - | - | - | - | 62 |

E
340
W73
G65

INTRODUCTION.

The first thought which occurred to me when I learned of the death of Robert C. Winthrop was the great Eulogist has surrendered, and all the scholars of the English and French speaking nations of the world owe his memory a return in kind.

Webster and Everett, Choate and Phillips were his rivals in popular oratory; Bancroft and Prescott, Ellis and Frothingham, Parkman and Motley were his rivals as historians; Story and Quincy, Holmes and Lowell, vied with him in graceful and courteous table talk and post-prandial eloquence: but I know of no record of any man who has had such opportunities and who has so perfectly satisfied the hopes and tender anxieties of relatives and friends in pronouncing fitting eulogies upon the great dead of America. Nor has he been the eulogist of Americans alone. Connected by blood with some of the noblest families in England he has, since 1847, been acquainted with the foremost men of Great Britain and France, and as President of the Massachusetts Historical Society and chief trustee of George Peabody he has told the story of most of the great men who have been gathered among the stars for the last fifty years.

The numerous societies, historical, religious and philanthropic, of which he was a member; the city of his birth and death; the congress of the country where he was once Speaker and Senator will, in due time and with proper ceremony, weave for him those laurel leaves which the Muse of history prepares for the great of earth. In the meantime I present to a few of my own friends the tribute I prepared for Mr. Winthrop in 1888 for the Chicago Literary Club, with the addition of an appendix illustrating possibly the man and his surroundings confident in the hope that they will appreciate them as the humble tribute of one who most highly honored his subject, and was grateful for his friendship.

If any of these pages shall drift from the "world's White City" to our Eastern seaboard, let it be remembered by those who may peruse them, that they are the spontaneous tribute of a western friend who is alone responsible for the choice of subjects considered, for the genealogical chart constructed entirely from material in our own Historical and Newberry Libraries and for the meagre glance at Mr. Winthrop's political career, which has been almost entirely ignored in deference to the warmth of sentiments felt by so many of his contemporaries and their successors.

The following Essay was read before the Chicago Literary Club on the 26th of November, 1888, Mr. James L. High, President; Mr. Henry S. Boutell, Secretary pro tem.

OUR SUPREME EULOGIST.

When Robert C. Winthrop, as president of the Massachusetts Historical Society, had pronounced his eulogy upon the memory of his associate, John Lothrop Motley, he called upon James Russell Lowell to follow him. Mr. Lowell began in language which has met my eye since my present subject was chosen, but which seemed to me very expressive and significant. He said, "Mr. President, you assign me a duty of whose danger you only are unconscious, in asking me to add anything to the words of one who by common consent is a master in the perilous oratory of commemoration."

Perilous and difficult indeed many of us have found it, and it may not be labor lost to occupy the hour assigned to us to-night in a brief study of the life, the works, the character and the style of that man who has been so by common consent, in the chief home of our literature and arts, denominated the master of eulogy.

Who of us has not been led into that perilous walk by some strong chord of sympathy or affection? Certainly no clergyman has ever escaped it, either as a duty or a choice, and rare indeed are the lawyers, or physicians, or artists, or men of business, or soldiers surviving from the tented field who have not been called upon to record their admiration or their love for friends who have fallen before them and whose memories they were not willing to let die.

From the cradle of the human race—from the first green sod that covered the stricken and lifeless form of the first man to this hour, the world has been sounding and reverberating the eulogies of the dear departed. Poetry and music have given their perpetual offering; the flowers of the field and the garden have mutely expressed their sweet and tender remembrance; the orator and historian have with sonorous sentence and eloquent illustration recorded the virtues of the departed.

Most of these eulogies have passed away like the flowers over which they were spoken, their transient loveliness all gone with the occasion for which they grew; and when we have found a man whose speech is golden, whose words of eulogy have been set in the volumes of our permanent literature, and when we find that he has said the right things, at the fitting time and place, concerning more than a hundred of the uncrowned kings of thought, and literature, and statesmanship, covering more than half of this most wonderful of all the centuries since the world began, we may well pause and look a little into the sources and causes of such marked excellence, such countless endeavor, such perfect success.

I.

HIS FAMILY AND GENEALOGY.

When Thomas Lindall Winthrop married Elizabeth Bowdoin Temple in Boston, Massachusetts, July, 1786, the wedding brought together in one ancestral tree a very rare and remarkable union of families; the most rare and most remarkable I have ever yet examined.

If you will take the family branches and construct them in the ordinary genealogical style into a great tree, the trunk of which shall be, if you please, the great orator who forms the topic of my essay, and call that trunk by the name of "Robert C. Winthrop," and from it build up the branches with the names of Winthrops, Temples, Bowdoins, Ervings, Lyndes, Portages, Lindalls, Dudleys, Tyngs and Nelsons, you will sound the names of men and families marked for conspicuous ability and public services for the last three centuries.

Enumerating his American ancestry alone, our subject is descended from two Governors Winthrop; from Chief Justice Wait Winthrop; from both Governors Thomas and Joseph Dudley; from Governor James Bowdoin, of Huguenot blood; from Hon. John Erving, one of the King's Council before the Revolution; from Hon. Edward Tyng, one of the King's Council in 1687; from Hon. Simon Lynde, the father and grandfather of two Chief Justices Benjamin Lynde; from Francis Browne, the ancestor also of Justice Joseph Story. His mother's father was Sir John Temple, the friend of Franklin, and son-in-law of Gov. Bowdoin. Temple was a kinsman and protégé of the great Chatham and the younger Pitt, and of the same family with Earl Temple and George Grenville, the late Lord Palmerston and the Dukes of Buckingham and Chandos, a family distinguished in English history for nineteen generations.

These distinguished ancestors have also brought him into collateral kinship with numberless families of deserved prominence, such as the descendants of Alexander Hamilton, Governor Stuyvesant, Governor Sullivan, the Amorys and Sears, Livingstons, Schuylers and Van Rensselaers.

II.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

To you, gentlemen, who graduated from our oldest University, the name and fame of Mr. Winthrop has a peculiar interest.

Harvard University was to him as much an inheritance as Boston Common, or the old State House, or Faneuil Hall.

Indeed the University itself was largely indebted for its very existence to John Winthrop, who had graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, England. President Edward Everett, at the Harvard Second Centennial in 1836, represented Governor Winthrop as making the speech which led the legislature of the infant colony to vote the original endowment under which the college was established, and President Quincy in his history of the university says, "Next to John Harvard, John Winthrop, the leader of the Massachusetts Colony and twelve times its elected governor, deserves grateful commemoration. His donation of books was large and valuable. His name and influence were always given in its support. There is probably no one to whose patronage the college was more indebted during the period of its infancy, weakness and dependence."

Nearly all of his male lineal ancestors had graduated at Harvard for generations, not to mention numberless collaterals. His father was of the class of 1780.

One of his father's grandfathers, Francis Borden, was of the class of 1774, and another of his grandfathers, Governor James Bowdoin, was of the class of 1745, and among his other lineal ancestors were Timothy Lindall of 1695, Governor Thomas Dudley of 1651, and Governor Joseph Dudley of 1665, and John Tyng of 1691.

When Mr. Winthrop entered Harvard, in 1823, we were fairly started on the up-grade of letters and learning, following our second war of independence which terminated so gloriously in 1815, and among his college-mates were numbers who have contributed to the peerless position occupied by our country to-day.

Graduating at nineteen years of age, the third in a class of fifty-three, and with a commencement oration which was soon put into the school-books as a model of English eloquence, he showed from the very start that his family wealth and distinction were not crutches to be leaned on, but that he had inherited the glorious aspiration to toil and labor for the good and glory of mankind.

Some of his speeches at the alumni meetings have been reported and published, and are replete with interesting reminiscences of the great men who had been connected with the university as officers or students in his day.

At the alumni meeting in 1852, he said: "We are here to bless the place of our earliest and best opportunities. We come one and all to bear our united testimony to the value of this venerated institution. We come to bring whatever laurels we have acquired, whatever treasures we have accumulated to adorn its hallowed shrines. We come to pay fresh homage to the memory of our fathers for having founded and reared it. We come to renew our tribute of gratitude to its earlier and its later benefactors. We come to thank God for having prospered and blessed it. And we come, above all, to acknowledge our own personal indebtedness to it and to make public recognition of the manifold obligations and responsibilities to God and man which rest upon us all by reason of the opportunities and advantages which we have here enjoyed.

"We arrogate nothing to ourselves in the way of distinction or privilege. We are not blind to the fact that there are those around us, who have enjoyed none of our academic opportunities, who have outstripped not a few of us, in the practical pursuits of literature and of life. We do not forget that there are some of them who have surpassed us all in the highest walks of art, of science, and of patriotic statesmanship. Honor, honor this day from this assembled multitude of scholars to the self-made, self-educated men who have adorned our country's history. Honor to the common schools of our land, from which such men have derived all which they have not owed to their own industry, their own energy, their own God-given genius.

"Bowditch, Fulton, Franklin, Washington; when will any American university be able to point to names upon its catalogue of alumni which may be likened to these names for the originality and profoundness of the researches, for the practical importance of the accomplishments, for the grandeur and sublimity of the inventions and discoveries, or for the noble achievements and glorious institutions with which they are indissolubly associated? Well may we say, as we proudly inscribe their names upon our honorary rolls, 'They were wanting to our glory, we were not wanting to theirs.'

"Nor are we here to indulge in any invidious comparisons between our own Harvard and other universities and colleges in the state or in the nation. It is pardonable to love our own mother better than other people's mothers. It is natural that we should 'Be to her faults a little blind,

Be to her virtues very kind.'

"Indeed, as we run our eye over her long list of children and see what a glorious company she has sent forth into every field of Christian service, and follow her along her starry way for more than two centuries, we might be almost pardoned for forgetting that she has or ever had any faults. Could we but see something of a higher moral discipline, something of a deeper religious sentiment, something of a stronger spiritual influence mingling with the sound scholarship which pervades her halls and giving something of a fresher and fuller significance to her ancient motto, 'Christo et Ecclesiae', there would be little or nothing more to be desired in her condition."

I have quoted but the prelude to his oration on the obligations and responsibilities of educated men. One other page of it seems to me to so fully show forth the vital principle and the style of the man that I cannot forbear quoting it:

"How much better, and purer, and nobler a literature might we not have, and how much more just and elevated a public sentiment as its result, if every man who is educated to the use of the pen or of the tongue could be made to feel within himself, as he sits down to his desk or rises to the rostrum, 'The word that I write or that I speak to-day is not for the moment or for myself alone. It is not mine to minister merely to my own pleasure, to my own profit, to my own fame. It is not mine to pander to some popular delusion, to fan some popular prejudice, to flatter some popular favorite, or to adorn some plausible falsehood. It is to produce an influence far beyond that which it immediately proposes. It is to enter, somewhere, in a greater or less degree, into the very springs and issues of human action. It may influence individuals. It may influence masses. It cannot rest indifferent. It cannot return unto me empty. It will mingle with the great current of public opinion in some part of its course where it winds through some quiet valley, or takes its way beneath some cottage window, if not where it foams and roars around some splendid capital or some mighty metropolis. This very word which I speak or write to-day may rouse up a resolute human soul to a newer and better life, or it may turn back some timid and wavering spirit from its truest and best ends, unsettle its faith, unship its anchor, and leave it wrecked for time and for eternity. It may stir the breast of a mighty nation to the maintenance of law or the vindication of liberty; or it may stimulate and infuriate it to the overthrow of the noblest institutions, in a mad pursuit of impracticable philanthropies and reforms. It may elevate and ennable the hopes, and views, and aims of mankind, and advance the cause of peace on earth and good-will among men; or it may blow up the smouldering embers of international strife, and kindle a conflagration which shall wrap a world in flames. I am, I must be, responsible for the result."

Those of you who have had the privilege of visiting the Memorial Hall and Sanders' Theatre in Cambridge, may feel interested in recognizing Mr. Winthrop's aid in starting those beautiful buildings. On the 17th July, 1857, (Vol. II, 354.) he presided at the Alumni meeting, and after eloquently praising the host of laborers who were there trained up and sent forth into every field and vineyard of church and of state, of theology, medicine, law, literature, science, philosophy, commerce, legislation, philanthropy and patriotism, he expressed a longing for some ample and commodious hall for the secular services and festivals of the university.

He said, "I envy the individual name which shall be inscribed on such a building. I have sometimes ventured to cherish the hope that the Alumni as an Association might be willing and able to undertake the work, and that a stately and commodious hall like the Senate house at Old Cambridge or the Theatre at Oxford might be seen standing on some appropriate spot of the college grounds bearing on its front, 'The Alumni of Harvard to their 'Alma Mater,'" where the exhibitions, and Class days, and Commencements of the University might find worthy accommodations; where the living alumni might hold their anniversary festivals and where the memorials of the distinguished dead might find a fit gallery for their display."

Within forty-eight hours after Mr. Winthrop's speech was reported, Mr. Charles Sanders, of the class of 1802, started the scheme to which he ultimately gave more than $60,000 and by his efforts greatly aided in procuring that remarkable building.

III.

MR. WINTHROP, THE STATESMAN.

Coming upon the historic stage with the widest range of distinguished ancestors, our subject was fortunate in the time and place of his advent. He was born in Boston, on the 12th of May, 1809, in the house occupied by his father, Lieutenant-Governor Winthrop, and belonging to James Bowdoin, minister to Spain and patron of Bowdoin College. He attended the Latin school on School Street where the Parker House now stands (which was kept by Samuel Greeley the father of our genial brother Samuel S. Greeley), and he here won the Franklin medal and a gold medal for a Latin poem.

After graduating at Harvard in 1828 he studied law under Daniel Webster, and was admitted to the bar in 1831. On the 23d of October, 1833, when twenty-four years old, on behalf of the young men of Boston, he made the welcoming speech to Henry Clay at the Tremont, and indicated the cardinal principles which revealed the needle of that political compass by which he, and almost he alone, has been guided for more than half a century. Few indeed of his contemporaries or his successors but have been led by some influence, or forced by some circumstances, to change their course or their principles, but a close examination of the record of Mr. Winthrop from 1833 to 1888 will show the same old conservative Whig, devoted to the Constitution and the Union, opposed to slavery wherever the Constitution permitted opposition, opposed everywhere to its extension, and in favor of universal education, proper protection to our trade and manufactures, and the largest possible development of internal improvements.

In 1834 he was elected to the Massachusetts house, and in 1835 he made a speech remarkable for its eloquence, its fire, its lofty spirit of liberality and justice in favor of compensating the Catholics for the destruction of the Ursuline convent in Charleston by a mob. (Vol. I, p 174.) He was at this time and for many years an earnest supporter of the Boston militia companies, which by their close connection with the voters are the bulwarks of civil liberty and order. He was captain of the Boston Light Infantry, lieutenant of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, and on the staff of three successive Governors, John Davis, Samuel T. Armstrong and Edward Everett.

In December, 1838, he delivered an address before the Boston Lyceum on Free Schools and Free Governments, taking advanced ground upon the importance of political education, holding "that children should be educated as those by whom the destinies of the Nation are one day to be wielded, and free schools cherished as places in which those destinies are even now to be woven." He has inculcated the same principles for fifty years, and he, more than any man, stamped them upon the great mind of General Grant, whom he had brought into the board of trustees of the Peabody fund, and had the pleasure of reading that great hero's declaration at the army reunion in 1875, in Iowa, when General Grant said, "Let us labor for the security of free thought, free speech, free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiment, and equal rights and privileges for all men, irrespective of nationality, color or religion; encourage free schools, and resolve that neither State nor Nation shall support any institution save those where every child may get a common-school education unmixed with any atheistic, pagan, or sectarian teaching."

In 1839 Mr. Winthrop's reputation outgrew its local celebrity at Boston, and he delivered an address at New York City in December on the "Pilgrim Fathers," which gave evidence of his full appreciation of the wonderful work done by his forefathers and that the eternal fitness of things demanded great, permanent and national work from himself. He had been a member of the Massachusetts house for five years, and had the honor of being elected its Speaker at an earlier age than any one before or since. He had been married and given hostages to fortune in the shape of two sons, who still survive—a solace to his old age.

In 1840 the name and fame of Mr. Winthrop became the property of the nation. With the ardor of a youth of thirty-one and the concentrated energies of as good Puritan and Huguenot blood as ever flowed, with the eloquence of a Massachusetts patriot and the well-balanced judgment of a disciple of Washington and Franklin, he went into the campaign of 1840 with General

Harrison and was triumphantly elected to Congress as sole Representative from Boston.

In this connection it may be well to state Mr. Winthrop's understanding of the creed of the Whig party, because they have been the principles upon which he has acted all his life.

In his interesting and instructive eulogy upon Henry Clay, in August, 1879, after he entered upon his seventy-first year, Mr. Winthrop said:

"What was this Whig party which he led so gallantly, before disappointed ambition, and inconsiderate philanthropy, and headlong fanaticism and secret know-nothing lodges, and corrupt coalitions at one end of the Union conspired with mad and monstrous schemes in the interest of African slavery at the other end to draw off so many of its members into new ranks, and doom it to a lingering death? What was the party of which Henry Clay and Daniel Webster were so long the shining lights, and of which Abraham Lincoln was so long one of the luminaries?

"It was a constitutional union party, which regarded the union of the States and the Federal Constitution as the only formal condition and bond of that Union, as things to be reverenced and maintained at all hazards. It was a law and order party, which tolerated no revolutionary or riotous processes of reform. It was a party of principle and purity, which consented to no corruption or traffic as a means of securing office or success. It was a conservative party, and yet a party of progress which looked to the elevation of American labor and the advancement of our national welfare by a discriminating adjustment and an equitable collection of duties on imports, by an honest currency, by a liberal administration of the public lands, and by needful appropriations from time to time for the improvement of rivers and harbors. It was a party of peace—domestic peace and foreign peace—opposed to every lawless scheme of encroachment or aggrandizement, at home or abroad, and studiously avoiding whatever might occasion internal commotion or external conflict. It was above all things a national party, extending over the whole country and systematically renouncing and repudiating all merely sectional organizations or issues."

Will it not somewhat puzzle the students of our next century to understand how it was that a small body of Free-soilers combining with the Conservative Democracy of Massachusetts could be able to defeat such a man as Winthrop, so true to the principles prevailing in his state? When they had elected Mr. Sumner his successor, he was forced to plant himself practically upon the platform of Mr. Winthrop. He said (works of Sumner, Vol. 2, p. 429) :

"We propose to wait and work patiently under and through the Constitution that our purposes may be peaceably accomplished in the spirit of that instrument and of our fathers. We are constitutionalists and Unionists. We reverence the Constitution of the United States and seek to guard it against infractions, believing that under the Constitution Freedom can be best preserved.

We reverence the union of the States, believing that the peace, happiness and welfare of all depend upon this blessed bond."

Nay, the Republican party itself was obliged to stand upon Mr. Winthrop's platform, and after Mr. Lincoln was elected President, solemn resolutions were adopted by us, in and out of Congress, pledging our party not to interfere with slavery in the states and offering to embody it by an amendment to the constitution itself.

Mr. Winthrop was constantly reëlected from Boston for ten years, and in 1850 was appointed United States Senator to fill the position vacated by Daniel Webster, who went into President Fillmore's Cabinet. These were ten years of active service. His youth and energy, his happy command of illustration, both from books and life, his genial and persuasive address, his splendid social position, and his intimate acquaintance with the leading scholars and statesmen of Great Britain and France made him the favorite leader of the House under Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, and lifted him in 1847, when only thirty-eight years old, to the Speakership of the House, a position regarded by many as the most honorable, as well as one of the most influential, under our Government. It is possible for an inferior man to be elected President or Vice-President, but not as Speaker of the House, which chooses its own presiding officer.

Mr. Winthrop's career as Speaker was eminently successful. The late Mr. Charles E. Hazewell said, "It was a common remark, and no one heard it without assenting to the truth of the words expressed, ‘Mr. Winthrop was born for the chair.’” Mr. James G. Blaine says, “The chief reason for his selection as Speaker was his preëminent fitness for the important post. He was but thirty-eight years of age, but he earned so valuable a reputation as a presiding officer that some of his decisions have been quoted as precedents in the National House and have been incorporated in permanent works on ‘Parliamentary Law.’”

In 1841 he made an elaborate speech on the tariff, in favor of protection to American labor and manufactures (Vol. 2, p. 306.) In 1843 he submitted, in behalf of the Committee on Commerce, strong resolutions against the imprisonment of free colored seamen from vessels touching at ports in the Southern States.

In 1844, when the great question as to the right of petition came before the House, and whether the anti-slavery petitions from Massachusetts presented by John Q. Adams should be received, Mr. Winthrop made a powerful speech in their support, breathing the liberty-laden air of Faneuil Hall and the Old South Church. He argued for “the inherent and inextinguishable elasticity of opinion, of conscience, of inquiry, which, like the great agent of modern art, gains only new force, fresh vigor, redoubled powers of progress and propulsion by every degree of compression and restraint; it is this to which the world owes all the liberty it has yet acquired, and to which it will owe all that is yet in store for it.

Well did John Milton exclaim in his noble defense of unlicensed printing, ‘Give me liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely above all liberties,’ for in securing that we secure the all-sufficient instrument for achieving all other liberties.”

In January, 1845, Mr. Winthrop made a powerful speech against the annexation of Texas upon the ground that it involved an extension of domestic slavery, and he made several speeches against the war with Mexico as an unjust contest for the acquisition of territory.

While recognizing the constitutional rights of the South to some provision for the return of fugitives, he refused to consent to any law which did not provide for a fair trial by jury and the writ of habeas corpus.

He said, “I hold it to be a just and reasonable provision, and one which ought to form a part of any bill which shall be passed for this purpose. There is a preliminary question, and that is whether he is a fugitive at all, whether he belongs or owes service to anybody. It must always be a question whether such a person be your slave or whether he be our freeman — a question which should be tried where he is seized and when the immediate liberty which he enjoys is about to be taken away from him. I am in favor of recognizing the right of trial by jury in all cases where a question of personal liberty is concerned.”

It was while Mr. Winthrop was Speaker of the House, in 1848, that the great opportunity of his lifetime occurred in being selected to pronounce the oration when the corner-stone of the Washington monument was laid.

When the corner-stone of Bunker Hill monument was laid, in 1825, there was anxious and careful consultation as to who should pronounce the oration. The choice fortunately fell upon Daniel Webster, whose oration, as Mr. Winthrop said, "shook the school-benches of New England," and passed into the classics of a language which the genius of Webster has shown to be the strongest, the subtlest, the smoothest, the best of modern times. When that magnificent monument was completed, in 1843, there was no anxiety, no discussion, no doubt as to what orator should stand beside it, for all the world felt that no voice but Webster's should announce the words "It is finished." And so it was with the still grander monument to Washington in our national capital. When its corner-stone was laid, in 1848, it was a matter of thought, discussion and anxiety as to who should give expression to a nation's reverence for its greatest and most representative character and hero. The choice fell almost by accident upon a young man less than forty years of age. Most eloquently did the young orator perform his difficult task, and when after thirty-seven years of labor and trial these United States had through the convulsions of civil war become fused into a compact and solidified Nation, and finished the grandest monument ever erected by a Nation to the honor of a single man, there was among our fifty millions of people no doubt or discussion as to who should pronounce the words "It is finished." Without distinction of party or locality, of creed or color, both North and South, East and West, moved by a common impulse pronounced the name of Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts.

Mr. Winthrop's seventeen years of political service came to an end in 1851. A coalition between the most radical wing of Free-soilers and the pro-slavery Democracy divided the offices and defeated the conservative, anti-slavery Whig party.

After a hard fought battle the coalitionists triumphed carrying both branches of the Legislature, but the conflict for Senator went on for months, and Charles Sumner was at last chosen by a bare majority. On the 26th ballot April 24, 1851, 384 votes were cast, 193 being necessary to a choice. Mr. Winthrop received the full Whig vote 166, Mr. Henry W. Bishop, (the father of our brother member) received 11, and Mr. Sumner 193 votes, mostly Democrats and a few Free-soilers. At the next State Election the Whigs insisted on running Mr. Winthrop for Governor. He received 60,000 votes, the Democrats cast 40,000 for George S. Boutwell, and the Free-soilers 30,000 for the eminent historian John G. Palfrey. The constitution at that time required a majority of all votes and so the election was thrown into the House, and the coalition elected Governor Boutwell.

Since 1852 Mr. Winthrop refused all political candidacies and appointments, and has devoted himself to literature, to history, to philanthropy.

IV.

PRESIDENT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Mr. Winthrop was a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society for nearly sixty years, and was its president for thirty years, from 1855 to 1885. It is the oldest and leading society of its kind in America, and composed of such men as the Adamses, Quincys, Everettts, Motley, Prescott, Saltonstall, Samuel Hoar and his sons, the Judge and Senator; Palfrey, Bancroft, Ellis, Parkman, and Winsor.

V.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

He was also for forty years an active member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; established in 1780, in the midst of our Revolutionary War, by his great grandfather, Governor Bowdoin, who was its first president. Among its other presidents were the three illustrious Adamses—John Adams, John Quincy Adams and Charles Francis Adams. Among its members were Franklin, Faraday, Rumford, Agassiz, Audubon, Arago, Bache, Sir David Brewster, Darwin, Humboldt, Lafayette and the Lowells.

It is difficult to overestimate the past and possible future benefit of this society to the world. At its centennial, in 1880, Mr. Winthrop remarked :

"Could the founders of this academy even now look down from the skies upon our own little State of Massachusetts, with what rapture would they behold encircling this academy as their original nucleus a natural history society, with its manifold and growing collections and cabinets; a technological institute, with its admirable curriculum of scientific education; a splendid museum of the fine arts; an observatory, with its comet-seekers and transit instruments, and with its noble refractor; the Lawrence Scientific School; the chemical laboratory of Prof. Cooke; the garden and herbarium of our great botanist, Dr. Gray; the magnificent Agassiz Museum of Comparative Zoölogy, and close at its side the Peabody Museum of Archæology and Ethnology; and all our thriving associations of history and literature and music, of horticulture and agriculture; and, better than all, the hosts of busy and devoted students in these and other institutions, who are engaged day by day and night by night in searching out the mysteries of nature, and extorting from her so many of the secrets which have been hid from all human eyes and all human conceptions from the foundations of the world!"

"They would be heard exclaiming with one accord, in the sublime words with which our first president concluded his inaugural discourse a hundred years ago, 'Great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty; in wisdom hast Thou made them all!'"

VI.

Mr. Winthrop was president of the Boston Provident Association for twenty-five years, working with such men as Dr. Peabody, Dr. Lothrop, Bishop Huntington and others. When he retired, in 1879, the Executive Committee said of him, "He brought to us not only the respect due to eminent national services and an honored name, but the power of organization and skill in administration which were natural to his character and had been matured by experience of weighty and conspicuous public affairs. His constant and punctual presence at our meetings has added both dispatch and dignity to the transaction of our business. His name has brought to us the most important of the legacies which we have received, and it is within bounds to say that for the generous endowment of our association we are as much indebted to him as if it had been his direct gift. The future historian of Boston can never pass by the important services which Mr. Winthrop has rendered to its charities."

Mr. Winthrop was a member of the vestry of Trinity Church, Boston, for nearly sixty consecutive years, and a delegate to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal church in America for more than a quarter of a century. His record, however, as a Christian was too broad to be hemmed in even by that most beautiful of all the parish churches in Christendom. He had the good fortune to worship for nearly thirty years with his grand Christian rector, Phillips Brooks, who was born in Boston at about the period when Mr. Winthrop was first elected a vestryman of old Trinity. Mr. Winthrop was president of the Massachusetts Bible Society and connected with many other religious societies. Not the least interesting of his addresses are those to the Bible societies and Young Men's Christian Associations. I would call attention especially to that one delivered April 9, 1859, at Boston, and repeated on May 5, 1859, at Richmond, Va., on "Christianity, neither Sectarian nor Sectional, the Great Remedy for Social and Political Evils," from which we take the following extracts (Vol. II, pp. 418 et seq.)

" Few persons can contemplate the present improved condition of the Christian world without lamenting that the best energies of Christian sects are still so often employed in criticising, censuring and condemning each other. I pray heaven that no accident and still more that no design may revive the slumbering embers of religious strife. Rarely does the strongest side prevail or even come off best from such encounters. Not often does even the right side, whether it be strongest or weakest, escape from them without damage or detriment. Principles indeed can never be conceded nor compromised. We can never abandon the Bible, even in the schools. We can never compromise the Lord's prayer or the ten commandments. We cannot spare a note or a chord of the time-honored and glorious harmonies of Old Hundred. Yet everything except principles, everything that is merely formal and conventional, may well be the subject of conciliatory arrangement under proper circumstances, and at the proper time for the sake of Christian peace. I can never think of the bitterness and rancor which is so often allowed to enter into religious differences and controversies, without remembering how much our religious opinions, our religious creeds, our religious connections have been determined—pre-determined, providentially determined—for us all by the mere influence of early and seemingly accidental associations. The place of our birth, the circumstances of our condition, the surroundings of our childhood, the fascination of some beloved and faithful pastor the paternal precept and example, the mother's knee, the family pew have after all done more to decide for each one of us the peculiarities of our religious faith and of our religious forms than all the catechisms of assemblies, the decrees of councils or the canons of convocations. We delight to worship God where our fathers and mothers worshipped him, to kneel at the same altar at which they knelt, to unite in the same prayers or it may be to utter the same responses, in which their voices were once heard and which they first taught us to lisp or to listen too as children. The memories of fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters with whom we have "taken sweet counsel together and walked to the house of God in company" cluster sweetly around us as we sit in the old seats and sing the old psalms and hymns. We almost shrink from trying to get to heaven by any other road than that which they traveled, lest we should miss them at our journey's end. Every man who has opportunity and education should read the gospel of Christ for himself and bring the best lights within his reach to aid him in its interpretation. But mysteries there are in that gospel which constrained even the great apostle to say, "Here we see through a glass, darkly." Mysteries there are which the reason of the natural man was never made or intended to penetrate, which it may be were expressly designed to humble the presumption and confound the pride and mortify the vanity of mere human wisdom, and to leave larger room for the childlike graces of humility and faith, and the speculative differences which such mysteries must ever and inevitably engender should be regarded with mutual deference and charity—never forgetting that it were an impeachment of the love of God and an imputation upon the mercy of Christ, to imagine that the essential elements of a true Christian faith have been placed beyond the easy reach and ready acceptance even of the humblest and simplest understanding." II. 422.

"I hail this union of young men of so many different Christian sects in a single association for Christian ends and objects, as a pledge that the jealousies and rivalries which have so long divided the church of Christ on earth, will be more assuaged and extinguished, that religious men of all denominations will more and more bear in mind the great and glorious things in which they all agree, and will strive to narrow instead of widening their causes of alienation and estrangement.

The day may come when the cause of Christianity may require the cordial and vigorous union of all who acknowledge God as their Father and Christ as their Redeemer and Saviour, and the Bible as the word of God and the only text-book of eternal truth, in order to withstand and resist the progress of a downright infidelity—cloaking itself under a thousand specious forms of positive and speculative philosophy, of materialism, spiritualism and pantheism. Let us prepare seasonably for such a day, and for the conflicts it will involve by uniting together in a league of Christian charity—holding our faith in the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace. Let us pursue our Christian work in the true spirit of Christianity—a spirit of love to God and of love to man—maintaining our peculiar and distinctive tenets firmly but never arrogantly, boldly but never offensively, uncompromisingly but never aggressively; ever respecting our neighbor's conscience as we claim our neighbor's respect for our own conscience, and not forgetting that our final responsibilities are not to each other but to that common Master before whom we must stand or fall. Who does not rejoice, as Sunday after Sunday comes round, to see the multitudes that keep holy day, thronging our streets and sidewalks and exchanging the smiles of recognition or the greetings of friendship or the formalities of ceremony as they make way for each other in passing along to their various places of religious worship. To human eyes indeed they seem to be moving in widely different directions, and so it may prove to have been with some of them; but so have I seen on a summer sea, in yonder bay, alike in calm and in storm, vessels of every sort and beneath every sign, sailing in widely different and diverging courses, crossing and recrossing each other's tracks and seemingly propelled by the most opposite and contrarious forces. Yet the same wind of heaven, blowing where it listeth, was the common source of their motive power, giving impulse and direction to the progress of them all alike, and bringing them all to be moored at last in one common haven of rest."

The broad-minded, beautiful tolerance of Mr. Winthrop is admirably illustrated by the following quotation from his oration on the 250th anniversary of the Landing of the Pilgrims: (Vol. III, p. 105.)

"Let those who will, indulge in the dream, or cherish the waking vision of a single universal church on earth, recognized and accepted of men, whose authority is binding on every conscience and decisive of every point of faith or form. To the eye of God, indeed, such a church may be visible even now in 'the blessed company of all faithful people,' in whatever region they may dwell, with whatever organization they may be connected, with Him as their head 'of whom the whole family in earth and heaven is named.' And as in some grand orchestra, hundreds of performers, each with his own instrument and his own separate score, strike widely variant notes, and produce sounds, sometimes in close succession and sometimes at lengthened intervals, which heard alone would seem to be wanting in everything like method or melody, but which heard together are found delighting the ear and ravishing the soul with a flood of magnificent harmony, as they give concerted expression to the glowing conceptions of some mighty master, even so—even so, it may be,—from the differing, broken, and often seemingly discordant strains of sincere seekers after God, the divine ear, upon which no lisp of the voice or breathing of the heart is ever lost, catches only a combined and glorious anthem of prayer and praise. But to human ears such harmonies are not vouchsafed. The Church in all its majestic unity shall be revealed hereafter. The ‘Jerusalem which is the mother of us all, is above,’ and we can only humbly hope that in the providence of God, its gates shall be wider, and its courts fuller, and its members quickened and multiplied by the very differences of form and of doctrine which have divided Christians from each other on earth, and which have created something of competition and rivalry, and even of contention, in their efforts to advance the ends of their respective denominations.”

VII.

THE PEABODY TRUST.

Great and striking as have been Mr. Winthrop’s contributions to politics, to Harvard University, to the charities of his vicinage, to historical and literary work, to the arts and sciences, and to his beloved church, it seems to me his last work in life, begun at an age when most of us are willing to rest upon our oars and float upon the stream, especially if the current of our lives runs through peaceful and beautiful shores, is the most touching and affecting of all his work.

On the 7th of February, 1867, his friend George Peabody, a philanthropist without precedent or parallel, preëminent among the benefactors of his age and race, like Washington among patriots and Shakespeare among poets, committed to Mr. Winthrop in sacred trust millions of dollars for the intellectual, moral or industrial education of the young of the South, "without other distinction than their needs and the opportunities of usefulness to them." In the first paragraph of Mr. Peabody's letter he alludes to Mr. Winthrop as "the distinguished and valued friend to whom I am so much indebted for cordial sympathy, careful consideration and wise counsel; and the details and organization of the trust I leave with you, only requesting that Mr. Winthrop may be chairman and Governor Fish and Bishop McIlvaine vice-chairmen of your body."

How singular and grand it was that this greatest benefaction of modern times should come from a son of Massachusetts to the poor children of many who had slain thousands of her loveliest sons in battle, and that the descendant of John Winthrop the Puritan should be the chief executor and trustee to those desolate children of the South.

From February, 1867, to the present time the choicest labor of Mr. Winthrop has been in the execution of this noble trust, and in its execution he has had the hearty coöperation of such men as Bishops McIlvaine and Whipple, Chief Justices Waite and Fuller, Hamilton Fish, General Grant, President Hayes, William M. Evarts, and others of similar eminence.

I will not enter into any detail of the immense amount of work accomplished by this board, but those of you who are teachers can imagine the study and travel and anxiety and responsibility involved when I state that the board has already distributed nearly three millions of money from the income of their fund. They have given to Alabama $89,800; to Arkansas $97,050; to Florida $61,375; to Georgia $102,552; to Louisiana $95,600; to Mississippi $71,378; to North Carolina $131,365; to South Carolina $74,425; to Tennessee $202,700; to Texas $99,850; to Virginia $259,550; to West Virginia $139,000 and to the Normal College at Nashville $303,000.

It is pleasant to be able to state in this connection that the generosity of Mr. Peabody and his Trustees has drawn with its magnet of sympathy other helps in the shape of a donation of 100,000 books from D. Appleton & Co., and about 100,000 more from A. S. Barnes & Co.

No wonder that the name of Winthrop is honored and reverenced all over the lately desolated South, next to that of Washington and Peabody; that States and cities and individuals should have covered his name with blessings. In South Carolina the General Assembly incorporated its training school for teachers by the name of "The Winthrop Training School," and its board "Resolved that the 12th day of May, the birthday of the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, be set apart as an annual memorial day, in commemoration of the beneficence by which the school was founded."

In this epitome of the records, which could well be amplified into volumes, I have merely sought to explain why it was that Robert C. Winthrop has been so situated, so connected and so gifted as to make him our "supreme Eulogist." I know no other man who has had such opportunities, and who has so perfectly realized the hopes and relieved the anxieties of relatives and friends by pronouncing fitting eulogies upon the great dead of his century.

He has survived almost every one of the toilers who kept step with his early years. My hour would not permit me to enumerate even the subjects of his formal eulogies.

Had I a magician's wand which could summon from their homes the spirits of those whose memories have been commemorated by the tongue of Mr. Winthrop, I should draw around us to-night such a company as the world could hardly have duplicated. He has delivered more than one hundred and forty public eulogies, of greater or less length and fullness. Leaving out his peerless Washington the majestic father of his country, and Franklin the great Bostonian, and Governor Bowdoin, and Governor Winthrop, and Luther and Dante, and a few others whom he knew only in the spirit and by their words and works, and confining ourselves only to those whose hearts were clasped with hooks of living steel to his own, what a company should we see!

At the head of the column come their country's defenders, those who bared their breasts to the shot and shell of foreign or domestic enemies that America, the hope of the world, might be preserved. Prescott, Knox, Lafayette, Rochambeau, Steuben, Dearborn, Preble, Sullivan, Decatur, Scott, Harrison, Taylor and Grant are all in line acknowledging in patriotic salute the eloquent words with which he has pictured them on the records of our history.

Following them comes that great company of statesmen whose voices were heard with his own in the State House and Faneuil Hall at Boston, or in the House or Senate Chamber at Washington: Webster, Calhoun and Clay, Adams and Everett, John Bell, John P. Kennedy, Nathan Appleton and William C. Rives, Thomas Benton and Lewis Cass, Josiah Quincy and John H. Clifford, Robert J. Breckenridge and John J. Crittenden; and among all those voices, now stilled forever, where was one which spoke more often, more feelingly for our Union and our Constitution than Robert C. Winthrop?

The somewhat saddened procession of patriots, remembered as more or less connected with our country's storms and tempests, gives way to another filled with the perpetual sunshine of letters and the arts. The great singers go marching by, headed by Dana, Halleck, Longfellow and Bryant.

In the broader field of literature the double column widens into a battalion and brings us numbers from beyond the seas, headed by Irving, Motley, Prescott, Palfrey, Savage, Sparks and Channing.

The true and only way to understand and appreciate Mr. Winthrop's work is to read his published addresses. They are an autobiography of his own life and mind and a history of his country and times, as well as a tribute to the hundreds of great men with whom he has lived and labored. His style is so simple and pure and runs so smoothly that one can read his speeches through consecutively without weariness. When reading the orations of his great predecessor, Webster, you feel as if you were always on mountain tops, but reading Mr. Winthrop is like a journey through his own beautiful New England, mounting at times to the highest altitudes of thought and expression, but constantly dipping into different grades—enjoying sometimes the running stream, the babbling brook, the hum of neighboring industry and the perfume of rural flowers.

His eulogies of individuals have been truly historical, and the salient points of their lives have been skillfully formulated and presented. Among his contemporaries might especially be mentioned his eulogies upon Nathan Appleton, Thomas Aspinwall, William H. Prescott, Josiah

Quincy, Edward Everett, John H. Clifford and George Peabody.

The various powers of the orator are admirably displayed by his beautiful treatment of those most capable men, all so great in character and works, yet so different and distinct in individual peculiarities.

But of all others his tributes to Washington, to Franklin, to Henry Clay, and Daniel Webster are preëminent. Did time permit I would select from his countless treasures a few jewels from each, and weave a chain of gems that you could carry away with you instead of any thoughts or words of my own, but time compels me to limit myself to a few specimens of his tributes to one subject only for illustration of his style and manner:

As long ago as 1837, while Mr. Webster was still alive, Mr. Winthrop said (Vol. I p. 216):—"The career of Mr. Webster is before the country. Let him retire when he will—he needs no defense, he requires no eulogy, he fears no investigation. Retire when he will, he will leave light, imperishable, unfading light behind him, and that not only gilding his own memory and casting glory upon our common wealth, but cheering and guiding and illuminating the path of constitutional patriotism throughout all generations. Other stars may have reached a higher ascension, may have sparkled with a more dazzling luster, may have shot with a wilder fire. Meteors too may have flashed and flamed and glared and cast a moment's wonder or a moment's fear and passed away. But as long as our glorious Constitution shall be borne up upon the waves of trial, and its banner of union and liberty be seen streaming to the winds, in every moment of doubt and danger the passengers and the pilot will be found turning alike for their direction to our own Northern Star,

"Of whose true fixed and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament."

In 1876 at the unveiling of Webster's statue in Central Park, N. Y., he said (Vol. III. p. 438): "To have seen and heard him on one of his field days was a privilege, which no one will undervalue whoever enjoyed it. There was a power, a breadth, a beauty, a perfection in some of his efforts which distanced all approach and rendered rivalry ridiculous."

"Among those who have been celebrated as orators or public speakers, in our own days or in other days, there have been many diversities of gifts and many diversities of operations. There have been those who were listened to wholly for their intellectual qualities, for the wit or the wisdom, the learning or the philosophy, which characterized their efforts. There have been those whose main attraction was a curious felicity and facility of illustration and description, adorned by the richest gems which could be gathered by historical research or classical study. There have been those to whom the charms of manner and the graces of elocution and the melody of voice were the all-sufficient recommendations to attention and applause. And there have been those who owed their success more to opportunity and occasion, to some stirring theme or some exciting emergency, than to any peculiar attributes of their own. But Webster combined everything. No thoughts more profound and weighty. No style more terse and telling. No illustrations more vivid and clear-cut. No occasions more august and momentous. No voice more deep and thrilling. No manner more impressive and admirable. No presence so grand and majestic, as his.

That great brain of his, as I have seen it working, whether in public debate or in private converse, seemed to me often like some mighty machine,—always ready for action, and almost always in action, evolving much material from its own resources and researches.

and eagerly appropriating and assimilating whatever was brought within its reach, producing and reproducing the richest fabrics with the ease and certainty, the precision and the condensing energy, of a perfect Corliss engine.

And he put his own crown-stamp on almost every thing he uttered. There was no mistaking one of Webster's great efforts. There is no mistaking them now. They will be distinguished, in all time to come, like pieces of old gold or silver plate, by an unmistakable mint-mark. He knew, like the casters or forgers of yonder statue, not only how to pour forth burning words and blazing thoughts, but so to blend and fuse and weld together his facts and figures, his illustrations and arguments, his metaphors and subject matter, as to bring them all out at last into one massive and enduring image of his own great mind!"

When the Webster Centennial Banquet was held at Boston, January 18, 1882, it was thought that Mr. Winthrop would not be able to speak, or would feel as if he had already said all he could say. Our associate Mr. Dexter told me at the time, that he went on purpose to hear Mr. Winthrop and that it was one of the greatest treats of his life, and with one quotation from that evening's speech I will close:

(Vol. IV., p. 377.) "Living and dead he has been the theme of the most eloquent orators, of the most faithful and loving biographers of our land—Everett, and Choate, and Hillard, President Felton of Harvard, President Woods of Bowdoin, and Mr. Wm. M. Evarts—to name no others—have found in him the inspiration of some of their most celebrated efforts, who may well be content to live on the applauses and praises which their efforts have called forth from immediate hearers and admirers. They will enjoy at least a reflected and traditional fame. But Webster will always stand safest and strongest on his own showing. His fame will be independent of praise or dispraise from other men's lips. He can be measured to his full altitude, as a thinker, a writer, a speaker, only by the standard of his own immortal productions. That masterly style, that pure Saxon English, that clear and cogent statement, that close and clinching logic, that power of going down to the depths and up to the heights of any great argument, letting the immaterial or incidental look out for itself, those vivid descriptions, those magnificent metaphors, those thrilling appeals,—not introduced as mere ornaments wrought out in advance and stored up for an opportunity of display, but sparkling and blazing out in the very heat of an effort, like gems uncovering themselves in the working of a mine,—these are some of the characteristics which will secure for Webster a fame altogether his own, and will make his works a model and a study long after most of those who have praised him, or who have censured him, shall be forgotten.

What if those six noble volumes of his were obliterated from the roll of American literature and American eloquence! What if those consummate defences of the Constitution and the Union had never been uttered, and their instruction and inspiration had been lost to us during the fearful ordeal to which that Constitution and that Union have since been subjected! Are we quite sure that we should have had the Constitution, as it was, and the Union as it is, to be fought for, if the birth we are commemorating had never occurred,—if that bright Northern Star had never gleamed above the hills of New Hemisphere? Let it be, if you please, that its light was not always serene and steady. Let it be that mist and clouds sometimes gathered over its disk, and hid its guiding rays from many a wistful eye. Say even, if you will, that to some eyes it seemed once to be shooting madly from its sphere. Make every deduction which his bitterest enemies have ever made for any alleged deviation from the course which had been marked out for it by others, or which it seemed to have marked out for itself, in its path across the sky. Still, still, there is radiance and glory enough left, as we contemplate its whole golden track, to make us feel and acknowledge that it had no fellow in our firmament.

It may be truly said of Mr. Winthrop as he said of Mr. Webster at the Webster centennial banquet in Boston in 1882 :

"After all, what are all the fine things which have ever been said of him, or which ever can be said of him, to-night or a hundred years hence, compared with the splendid record which he has left of himself as a debater in Congress and as an orator before the people? We do not search out for what was said about Pericles or Demosthenes or Cicero or Burke. It is enough for us to read their orations."

Mr. Winthrop will be remembered by different men in various characters as an historian, a scholar, a statesman, a dispenser of hospitality to distinguished visitors from the Old World, as a Christian or a philanthropist.

But where and how will he be remembered longest and best?

When the young men of future generations pay their first visit to Bunker Hill, and behold the speaking statue of Colonel Prescott, they will surely be told to read of its graphic story from the orator who unveiled it to an admiring populace.

When they behold the lifelike statue of the philosopher and patriot Benjamin Franklin, in front of the old court house in Boston, so near the place of his birth and the grave of his parents, they will be told by whom that statue was inaugurated and the admirable oration pronounced upon its completion.

When they visit the memorials of our great men in New York, and behold the colossal statue of that colossal genius Daniel Webster, they will be directed to the grand oration spoken at its first exhibition by his pupil and friend, who more than any other orator of our times has pictured him to us in words that will live. When they visit the sandy plains of Yorktown, one of their chief delights will be the story there told before the representatives of three nations upon the hundredth anniversary of the triumph of American arms. When they repair to the capital of our country and stand beside the monument to Washington, of all the figures which will come trooping before their excited imaginations there will be few indeed which will stand out more vividly than that of the tall, slender, courteous orator who was part of its corner stone and its capstone; and in fancy they will still hear his ringing tones as he said: "Build it to the skies, you cannot outreach the loftiness of his principles! Found it upon the massive and eternal rock, you cannot make it more enduring than his fame! Construct it of the peerless Parian marble, you cannot make it purer than his life! Exhaust upon it the rules and principles of ancient and of modern art, you cannot make it more proportionate than his character!"

NO 1600

SIMON LYI
1624-165

HANNAH NEWD
1635-1654

JAMES LINDALL
1658.

TIMOTHY LINDALL
1642-1669.

MARY 1652.

LINDALL
1670.

MARY VEREN 1648.

NATHANIEL VEREN

APPENDIX.

RESOLUTIONS.

At the regular annual meeting of the Chicago Historical Society, on the 20th day of November, 1894, Mr. Edward G. Mason, President.

Upon motion of Mr. Daniel Goodwin, seconded by Mr. Charles Mulliken, the following memorial tribute was unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, the Chicago Historical Society has learned through the Public Press of the death of the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, who for many years has been one of our honorary members, and for fifty-five years was a distinguished member of the Massachusetts Historical Society, we desire to put upon our records our great estimate of the deceased as a historian, orator and philanthropist.

Mr. Winthrop came from historical stock, his father, Thomas Lyndall Winthrop having been for many years President of the Massachusetts Historical Society.

In his varied positions as member of the Massachusetts Legislature; of the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States; as President of the Massachusetts Historical Society for thirty years from 1855 to 1885; as President of the Bunker Hill Monument Association and as President of the Trustees of the Peabody Education Fund he has commemorated the lives of more than one hundred and fifty of the leading men of our own country and many of his great contemporaries of foreign lands, and has so accomplished the difficult tasks as to write a history not only of his own times but of our entire country from its cradle days until now. His eloquent pictures of the great men of this country will live for lovers of biography and history as long as we possess a national flag and an undivided country.

Like his predecessors in the United States Senate,

Daniel Webster and Edward Everett, his whole heart and his wonderful eloquence were devoted to the constitution of his country.

Plymouth chose him for the orator of the day on celebrating the 250th anniversary of the Landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock, December 21, 1870.

The City of Boston claimed him for her 100th anniversary on the 4th of July, 1876.

The City of New York chose him for her orator when the bronze statue of Daniel Webster was unveiled in Central Park in 1876.

The Bunker Hill Association selected him for its orator June 17, 1881, when Col. Prescott retook the hill where he led the most thrilling and picturesque battle since Marathon and Thermopylae.

The United States pointed to him as the foremost man of her then forty millions to deliver the oration at Yorktown on the 19th of October, 1881, the 100th anniversary of the final triumph of the patriot army.

He was the chosen orator of our Government to lay the corner stone of the Washington Monument at our National Capital in 1848, and to deliver the oration at its final completion in 1885.

In these most conspicuous and trying positions Mr. Winthrop so acquitted himself as to answer the demands of the literary critic, the precise historian and the full-hearted patriot.

We cannot limit our eulogy to Mr. Winthrop as an historian and orator, for he was no less conspicuous as a Christian philanthropist. As President of the Boston Provident Association for twenty-five years, he exhibited such skill in organization and administration as to point him out as the proper executive head of the great Charitable Trust endowed by George Peabody in 1867, and which in the extent and magnitude of its charities and the exalted station of its directors eclipses everything of its kind in history. Therefore, be it Resolved, that a copy of this memorial minute be spread upon our records, and that copies of the same be sent to Massachusetts Historical Society, to the Trustees of the Peabody Education Fund, and to the American Historical Society.

LIST OF MR. WINTHROP'S EULOGIES.

| | TIME | DELIVERED | VOL. | PAGE |
|-----------------------------|-----------|----------------|------|------|
| Adams, John | 1735-1826 | Dec. 16, 1873 | 3 | 293 |
| Adams, John Q | 1767-1848 | Feb. 24, 1848 | 1 | 614 |
| Agassiz, Louis | 1807-1873 | April 16, 1874 | 3 | 312 |
| Aiken, Gov. Wm | 1806 | | -- | |
| Ames, Seth | 1805-1881 | Sept. 8, 1881 | 4 | 280 |
| Appleton, Nathan | 1779-1861 | Aug. 8, 1861 | 2 | 502 |
| Appleton, Samuel | 1766-1853 | Sept. 17, 1855 | 2 | 222 |
| Appleton, William | 1786-1862 | Feb. 18, 1862 | -- | 516 |
| Aspinwall, Col. Thos | 1786-1876 | Oct. 12, 1876 | 3 | 432 |
| Bacon, Rev. Leonard | 1802-1881 | July 12, 1882 | 4 | 372 |
| Barnes, Gen. Jos. K | 1817-1883 | Oct. 3, 1883 | 4 | 452 |
| Bartlett, Wm. S | 1800-1883 | Dec. 13, 1883 | 4 | 474 |
| Bell, Luther V | 1806-1862 | Mar. 13, 1862 | 2 | 515 |
| Bigelow, Dr. Jacob | 1787-1879 | Feb. 13, 1879 | 4 | 23 |
| Bigelow, Erastus B | 1814-1879 | Dec. 11, 1879 | 4 | 111 |
| Bowdoin James | 1727-1790 | Sept. 5, 1849 | 1 | 90 |
| Bowdoin, James | 1752-1811 | Sept. 5, 1849 | 1 | 90 |
| Brooks, William G | 1807-1879 | Jan. 9, 1879 | 4 | 18 |
| Bryant, William C | 1794-1878 | June 13, 1878 | 3 | 510 |
| Budington, William I | 1815-1879 | Dec. 11, 1879 | 4 | 114 |
| Bulloch, Alexander H | 1816-1882 | Feb. 9, 1882 | 4 | 381 |
| Burton, John Hill | 1800-1881 | Sept. 8, 1881 | 4 | 281 |
| Calhoun, John C | 1782-1850 | April 1, 1850 | 1 | 651 |
| Chadbourne, Paul A | 1824-1883 | Mar. 8, 1883 | 4 | 411 |
| Channing, Wm. E | 1780-1842 | April 18, 1880 | 4 | 131 |
| Chastellux, Mq's. de | 1734-1788 | May 13, 1859 | 2 | 485 |
| Circourt, Adolph de | 1800-1879 | Jan. 8, 1880 | 4 | 116 |
| Clay, Henry | 1777-1852 | Aug. 1879 | 4 | 39 |
| Clifford, Gov. John H | 1809-1876 | Jan. 13, 1876 | 3 | 342 |
| Crittenden, J. J | 1787-1863 | Aug. 13, 1863 | 2 | 558 |
| Cushing, Caleb | 1800-1879 | Jan. 9, 1879 | 4 | 19 |
| Dana, Richard H | 1815-1882 | Jan. 12, 1882 | 4 | 372 |
| Dante | 1265-1321 | May 11, 1865 | 2 | 664 |
| Davis, George T | 1810-1877 | Oct. 11, 1877 | 3 | 477 |
| Davis, Gov. John | 1787-1854 | April 26, 1854 | 2 | 179 |
| Dearborn, Henry | 1751-1829 | April 10, 1884 | 4 | 319 |
| Dearborn, Henry A. S. | 1783-1851 | April 10, 1884 | 4 | 495 |
| Dexter, George | 1883 | Jan. 10, 1884 | 4 | 481 |
| Dix, John A | 1798-1879 | May 8, 1879 | 4 | 34 |
| Emerson, Geo. B | 1797-1881 | Mar. 10, 1881 | 4 | 229 |
| Everett, Edward | 1794-1865 | Jan. 30, 1865 | 2 | 653 |
| Felton, Cornelius C | 1807-1862 | Mar. 13, 1862 | 2 | 517 |

| | TIME | DELIVERED | VOL. | PAGE |
|------------------------------|-----------|----------------|------|------|
| Fillmore, Millard | 1800-1874 | Mar. 12, 1874 | 3 | 307 |
| Folsom, Chas | 1794-1872 | Dec. 12, 1872 | 3 | 186 |
| Frothingham, Nath'l | 1793-1870 | April 14, 1870 | 3 | 66 |
| Frothingham, Rich'r'd | 1812-1880 | Feb. 12, 1880 | 4 | 125 |
| Goddard, Delano A | -1882 | July 12, 1882 | 4 | 373 |
| Graham, William A | 1801-1875 | Oct. 6, 1875 | 3 | 326 |
| Grant, Gen. U. S. | 1822-1885 | Oct. 7, 1885 | 4 | 574 |
| Gray, John C | 1793-1881 | Mar. 10, 1881 | 4 | 227 |
| Grigsby, Hugh Blair | 1806-1881 | May 12, 1881 | 4 | 235 |
| Grinnell, Joseph | 1789-1885 | Jan. 13, 1876 | 3 | 344 |
| Hancock, John | 1737-1793 | Sept. 17, 1856 | 2 | 273 |
| Haven, Samuel F | 1806-1881 | Sept. 8, 1881 | 4 | 281 |
| Hillard, Geo. S | 1808-1879 | Feb. 13, 1879 | 4 | 26 |
| Hudson, Chas | 1795-1881 | May 12, 1881 | 4 | 233 |
| Jones, John Winter | 1791-1881 | Sept. 8, 1881 | 4 | 281 |
| Kennedy, John P | 1795-1870 | Sept. 8, 1870 | 3 | 69 |
| King, Daniel P | 1801-1850 | July 27, 1850 | 1 | 697 |
| King, Rufus | 1755-1827 | Nov. 20, 1854 | 2 | 200 |
| Knox, Maj.-Gen. Henry | 1750-1806 | May 27, 1857 | 2 | 348 |
| Laboulaye, Edw. R. L. | 1811-1883 | June 14, 1883 | 4 | 425 |
| Lafayette, Gen | 1757-1834 | Oct. 19, 1881 | 4 | 333 |
| Langdon, Elwyn Alf'd | 1804-1883 | April 10, 1884 | 4 | 494 |
| Lawrence, Abbott | 1792-1855 | Aug. 20, 1855 | 2 | 210 |
| Lenox, James | 1800-1880 | Mar. 11, 1880 | 4 | 128 |
| Lincoln, Abraham | 1809-1865 | April 29, 1865 | 2 | 661 |
| Livermore, Geo | 1809-1865 | Sept. 14, 1865 | 2 | 667 |
| Lowell, John A | 1797-1881 | Nov. 10, 1881 | 4 | 364 |
| Luther, Martin | 1483-1546 | Nov. 10, 1883 | 4 | 467 |
| Lyman, Theodore | 1792-1849 | Oct. 24, 1885 | 4 | 668 |
| Lyndhurst, Lord | 1772-1863 | Nov. 12, 1863 | 2 | 567 |
| Manning, Thomas C | -1887 | Oct. 3, 1888 | | |
| Martin, M. Henri | 1810-1883 | Jan. 10, 1884 | 4 | 479 |
| McIlvaine, Bishop | 1799-1873 | July 16, 1873 | 3 | 255 |
| Mendelssohn | 1809-1847 | May 21, 1857 | 2 | 341 |
| Metcalf, Theron | 1784-1875 | Dec. 9, 1875 | 3 | 341 |
| Mignet, Francis A | 1796-1884 | April 10, 1884 | 4 | 487 |
| Miles, James B. | 1822-1875 | Dec. 9, 1875 | 3 | 340 |
| Minot, William | 1783-1874 | Mar. 12, 1874 | 3 | 302 |
| Motley, John Lothrop | 1814-1877 | June 14, 1877 | 3 | 467 |
| Newell, William | 1803-1881 | Nov. 10, 1881 | 4 | 364 |
| Palfrey, Dr. John G. | 1796-1881 | May 12, 1881 | 4 | 238 |
| Parker, Francis E | | Feb. 11, 1886 | 4 | 586 |
| Peabody, George | 1795-1869 | Feb. 8, 1870 | 3 | 36 |
| Perkins, Thomas H | 1764-1854 | Oct. 1854 | 4 | 575 |
| Phillips, John C | 1839-1885 | Mar. 12, 1885 | 4 | 555 |
| Preble, Geo. H | 1816-1885 | Mar. 12, 1885 | 4 | 555 |
| Prescott, Col. William | 1726-1795 | June 17, 1881 | 4 | 253 |
| Prescott, William H | 1796-1859 | Feb. 1, 1859 | 2 | 405 |
| Quincy, Edmund | 1808-1877 | June 14, 1877 | 3 | 465 |

| | TIME | DELIVERED | VOL. | PAGE |
|----------------------------|-----------|----------------|------|------|
| Quincy, Eliza S----- | 1798-1884 | Feb. 14, 1884 | 4 | 485 |
| Quincy, Josiah----- | 1744-1775 | Dec. 21, 1853 | 2 | 140 |
| Quincy, Josiah, Jr .. | 1772-1864 | July 14, 1864 | 2 | 584 |
| Sears, David----- | 1787-1871 | Feb. 2, 1881 | 3 | 138 |
| Sears, Barnas | 1802-1880 | Feb. 2, 1881 | 4 | 206 |
| Sparks, Jared | 1789-1866 | April 3, 1866 | 2 | 670 |
| Salisbury, Stephen .. | 1798-1884 | Oct. 9, 1884 | 4 | 515 |
| Seward, William H .. | 1800-1872 | Dec. 12, 1872 | 3 | 190 |
| Somerby, Horatio G .. | 1805-1872 | Dec. 12, 1872 | 3 | 187 |
| Stanhope, Earl----- | 1805-1875 | Jan. 13, 1876 | 3 | 357 |
| Stanley, Dean A. P .. | 1815-1881 | Sept. 8, 1881 | 4 | 283 |
| Sumner, Chas | 1811-1874 | Mar. 12, 1874 | 3 | 309 |
| Taney, Roger B | 1777-1864 | Mar. 13, 1873 | 3 | 245 |
| Taylor, Zachary | 1784-1850 | June 26, 1872 | 3 | 173 |
| Taylor, Richard | 1826-1879 | Oct. 1, 1879 | 4 | 90 |
| Thayer, Nathaniel | 1808-1883 | Mar. 8, 1883 | 4 | 412 |
| Thomas, Benj. F | 1813-1878 | Oct. 10, 1878 | 3 | 524 |
| Ticknor, George | 1791-1871 | Feb. 9, 1871 | 3 | 140 |
| Tuttle, Chas. Wesley .. | 1829-1881 | Sept. 8, 1881 | 4 | 279 |
| Upham, Charles W | 1802-1875 | Oct. 14, 1875 | 3 | 331 |
| Verplanck, Gulian C .. | 1796-1870 | April 14, 1870 | 3 | 64 |
| Visconti, Baron L. T. J .. | 1791-1853 | Jan. 24, 1881 | 4 | 199 |
| Waite, Morrison R | 1816-1888 | Oct. 3, 1888 | | |
| Walker, Pres. James .. | 1794-1874 | Oct. 14, 1875 | 3 | 330 |
| “ “ “ | “ “ | Feb. 18, 1878 | 3 | 500 |
| Warren, Judge Chas. H .. | ----- | Oct. 14, 1875 | 3 | 330 |
| Washburne, Emory | 1799-1877 | April 11, 1877 | 3 | 457 |
| Washington, Geo | 1732-1799 | July 4, 1848 | 1 | 70 |
| “ “ | “ “ | May 27, 1857 | 2 | 346 |
| “ “ | “ “ | June 17, 1857 | 2 | 351 |
| “ “ | “ “ | Feb. 22, 1863 | 2 | 553 |
| “ “ | “ “ | Feb. 22, 1873 | 3 | 236 |
| “ “ | “ “ | Feb. 22, 1885 | 4 | 525 |
| Watson, Samuel | -1877 | Oct. 3, 1877 | 3 | 475 |
| Webster, Daniel | 1782-1852 | Feb. 15, 1837 | 1 | 216 |
| “ “ | “ “ | May 21, 1857 | 2 | 335 |
| “ “ | “ “ | Nov. 25, 1876 | 3 | 436 |
| “ “ | “ “ | Jan. 18, 1882 | 4 | 375 |
| Wetmore, Samuel | 1812-1885 | Oct. 7, 1885 | 4 | 573 |
| Wilson, Henry | 1812-1875 | Dec. 9, 1875 | 3 | 340 |
| *Winthrop, Benj. R .. | 1804-1879 | Sept. 11, 1879 | 4 | 85 |
| Woods, Leonard | 1707-1807 | Jan. 9, 1879 | 4 | 22 |
| Wyman, Jeffries | 1814-1874 | Feb. 18, 1878 | 3 | 502 |

*Gov. John, Life and Letters, 1864-1867, 2 vols.

This list ends in 1886. Later Eulogies are scattered through the published proceedings of the different societies of which Mr. Winthrop was a member.

MR. WINTHROP'S ESTIMATE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

(Vol. II. 661.)

Beyond all doubt the life of President Lincoln was a thousand fold the most precious life in our whole land; and there are few of us I think who would not willingly have rescued it at the risk, or even at the sacrifice of our own. The cheerful courage, the shrewd sagacity—the earnest zeal, the imperturbable good nature, the untiring fidelity to duty, the ardent devotion to the Union, the firm reliance upon God, which he has displayed during his whole administration; and the eminent moderation and magnanimity, both toward political opponents and public enemies, which he has manifested since his recent and triumphant reelection, have won for him a measure of regard and of respect and of affection such as no other man of our age has ever enjoyed.

IN RE THE DEARBORNS.

BOSTON, 2 April, 1884.

Dear Mr. Goodwin:—I thank you sincerely for the copy of your "Dearborns," which you have kindly sent me, and still more for the discourse itself. I have read it with great interest and gratification, and I cordially congratulate you on so successful a production. If you could send me another copy, addressed on the cover or fly leaf to the Massachusetts Historical Society from yourself, I should take pleasure in presenting it publicly at their annual meeting on the 10th inst. A copy should go to the library of Bowdoin College. I rejoice that the names of these good old friends of my boyhood and early manhood are so pleasantly and deservedly reviewed.

Yours truly,

ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

In presenting the book to the Massachusetts Historical Society, Mr. Winthrop said (Vol. IV., page 595), I must not conclude these introductory remarks without presenting to our library, in the name of Daniel Goodwin Esq., of Chicago, a very interesting and notable memoir of "The Dearborns,"—a commemorative discourse delivered before the Chicago Historical Society, on the eightieth anniversary of the occupation of Fort Dearborn and the first settlement of Chicago, in December last. It gives an excellent account of the career and character of General Henry Dearborn, and of his son General Henry Alexander Scammell Dearborn, both of whom were long conspicuous in the history of our country and our commonwealth; and it is illustrated by portraits of them both. The father was a gallant officer of the Revolution from Bunker Hill to Yorktown, and afterwards Secretary of War and Commander-in-Chief of the United States Army. The son was Collector of the Customs in this city, a member of Congress from Norfolk, first President of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, and prominently associated with the erection of the Bunker Hill Monument and the establishment of the Mount Auburn cemetery.

Our thanks are due and will be returned, with the sanction of the Society to Mr. Goodwin, for so just and admirable a tribute to these patriotic and public-spirited men, so long known and honored in our community.

IN RE EDWIN C. LARNED.

Those who have read Mr. Larned's great argument in the Fugitive Slave case will be interested to read Mr. Winthrop's speeches in favor of a jury trial, and the right of the slave to the writ of habeas corpus and against the extension of slavery, or slave territory, and in favor of the admission of California under a constitution prohibiting slavery. The world is accustomed to think of Mr. Winthrop as a conservative and of Mr. Larned as radical, but the sentiments, and principles, and moral convictions of the two were identical. The two following letters will explain themselves:

BOSTON, 20 April, 1886.

Dear Mr. Goodwin:—Your handsome volume, in memory of Edwin C. Larned, came this morning.

I desire to acknowledge it gratefully without delay. I am just breaking up my winter home with a view to returning to Brookline after a journey of three or four weeks. I must therefore postpone doing justice to your memoir until I am established in summer quarters. I have read enough of it, however, to feel sure that I shall be interested in reading the whole.

Believe me, with kind regards

Yours truly,

ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

BROOKLINE, MASS., 6 July, 1886.

Dear Mr. Goodwin:—I have at last found an hour in my summer retirement to read the book you kindly sent me many weeks ago, "In Memory of Edwin C. Larned." I can now thank you for it intelligently. Your address is admirable, and so is that of Bishop Harris; the whole volume illustrates a character of great energy. The argument in the Fugitive Slave rescue is strong and brilliant, and exhibits power and eloquence. I had never known Mr. Larned and am not sure that I had ever heard of him until I read this volume. But I shall remember him henceforth as one whom it must have been a privilege to know, and whose memory it must be a pleasure to you to recall and illustrate. Accept my thanks for the volume and believe me.

Very truly yours,

ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

LETTERS.

The following letter was written by Mr. Winthrop after perusal of the foregoing essay prepared for the Chicago Literary Club.

BROOKLINE, 21 Nov., 1888.

Dear Mr. Goodwin:—You have been at great pains in describing my career and I thank you for all your kind and complimentary expressions. Your list of the persons I have noticed at greater or less length has come duly, and I return it with the addition of three names, Judge Manning of Louisiana, Chief Justice Waite of Ohio, and Gov. Wm. Aiken of South Carolina. These tributes are in our two last serials of the Peabody proceedings, published since my fourth volume was made up. The list is really a portentous one, reminding me forcibly of the great number of friends who have passed away since I began my public or quasi public life. All of them were associated with me either in Congress or in the Historical Society, or on the Peabody Board, and my notices of them have been in the way of duty.

You ask about my portraits. Eastman Johnson took a crayon of me when I was early in Congress, and when he was just beginning his career as an artist. Healy painted a kit-cat portrait of me in 1846; Huntington of New York painted a large family portrait of me in 1870. He also painted the full length of me in 1881–2, which is in the Speaker's corridor at Washington, presented by citizens of Massachusetts in recognition of my Yorktown oration. Huntington has since painted a third original of me for the Historical Society, of Massachusetts, on my withdrawal from thirty years presidency in 1885. There is a medallion of me by Ball Hughes in 1841 and a lithograph by a celebrated French artist taken in Paris, in 1847.

Accept my renewed acknowledgements of the trouble you have taken in reviewing my record and for the compliments you have paid me and believe me.

Very truly yours,
ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

BOSTON, March 21, 1889.

Dear Mr. Goodwin:—I thank you for sending me the little volume of sermons by our lamented friend Bishop Harris. Gov. Baldwin sent me a copy of his Bohlen lectures some years ago, and I have known him personally and have heard him preach at our Trinity Church. He was one of our ablest and best bishops, and he has been called higher too soon for every one but himself. I shall read these select sermons from time to time with great interest. Believe me, with kind regards to Mrs. Goodwin,

Yours very truly,
ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

P.S. I send you in a large envelope two of my latest productions: one a long notice of Washington, the other a shorter notice of John Winthrop. I prepared them at the request of the editors of Appleton's New Cyclopedic of American Biography—just published—the publishers sent me a few oversheets containing both articles, and I send you one of each.

BROOKLINE, MASS., May 22, 1890.

Dear Mr. Goodwin:—I returned home recently to find my table crowded with books, letters and pamphlets which had accumulated during a month's absence. I had been at New York, Washington and Richmond; and time had taken the opportunity to add another unit to the number of my years.

I avail myself of a moment's leisure to thank you for the kind expressions of your letter on my birthday.

I have entered my 82d in better condition than I had any right or reason to anticipate. But I am glad to be quietly established in my summer home, where I can "rest and be thankful." I was grieved to see the announcement of Wirt Dexter's death. He spent an an hour with me at Beverly farms last summer, while I was passing a few days with my son. I thought he was good for twenty years more of life and usefulness.

Believe me, with kind regards to your wife,

Yours very truly,

ROBT. C. WINTHROP.

